Introduction

Child abuse and neglect are serious public health issues. Child maltreatment affects millions of Americans. Intimate partner violence (IPV) is a serious, preventable public health problem that can increase the risk of interpersonal and family violence. Families need support. Families experienced violence from an intimate partner during the COVID-19 pandemic. The COVID-19 pandemic and resulting stresses exacerbated conditions that can increase the risk of interpersonal and family violence.

1 in 7 men
1 in 7

Supporting Caregivers

Supporting caregivers is supporting children. Children's health is supported when we provide resources for parents and individuals experiencing violence. Health care providers can serve as an important resource to help individuals who may not otherwise seek help. Health care providers can support families and prevent child maltreatment.

You don't have to do this lifesaving work alone.

You know how deeply violence and trauma can impact your patients and their families. The COVID-19 pandemic has made conditions worse for families experiencing violence.

Improving arrangements that may help

Community based organizations serving people who experience violence stayed in operation throughout the pandemic. Community based organizations provide support to family violence. For many families, the COVID-19 pandemic has made conditions worse for families experiencing violence.

1 in 4
1 in 4

Improving arrangements that may help

Community based organizations serving people who experience violence stayed in operation throughout the pandemic. The COVID-19 pandemic has made conditions worse for families experiencing violence.

Should you care if health care providers can improve arrangements that may help?

Families Experiencing Violence in the Home

The COVID-19 pandemic has made conditions worse for families impacted by intimate partner violence. It is important to know the disproportionate impact on men and women. Some have gone without treatment during the pandemic. People have gone without care...I think it's important to know the disproportionate impact on men and women. People have gone without care...I think it's important to know the disproportionate impact on men and women.

Supporting Caregivers as a Resource

Health care providers can serve as an important resource to families experiencing violence. Health care providers can improve arrangements that may help. People experiencing violence did not always have long-term negative impacts on health outcomes.

The role of the pediatrician

Health care providers can support families experiencing violence. Health care providers can improve arrangements that may help. People experiencing violence did not always have long-term negative impacts on health outcomes.