Brad Thompson, MA, Licensed Counselor for the Hali Project is interviewed.

BRAD THOMPSON: I have no doubt that the care coordination piece in Hali's life has improved her quality of life. It's improved our quality of life because we don't have to do a lot of the things that I hear many parents having to do and that allows us to spend time in other areas of life being more balanced. We have a son who needs attention and needs his parents to be available at times and we as a married couple need to spend time focusing on that relationship and the care coordinator is just one more piece of this puzzle that allows us to free up some time to take advantage and to take care of those other things.
